Australian Human Rights Institute

The Australian Human Rights Institute applies leading research to real-world human rights violations to make an impact on communities when they most need innovative responses. The Institute works in partnership with government, industry, and human rights defenders in the community.

Competitive advantage

The Australian Human Rights Institute is a unique centre of knowledge in Australia and the world, combining medical, engineering and legal minds to find human rights solutions for older persons

Capabilities and facilities

- Researchers from diverse fields collaborating to explore human rights solutions
- Working across the priority areas of business and human rights, health and human rights and gender justice

Impact

The Security in old age for single older women without children project' will inform the work of the financial services sector in supporting these women to navigate the tax/transfer, housing and superannuation systems and in policy advocacy on improving women's financial security in old age
